Doing Business
North America

The Center for the Study of Economic Liberty would like to thank Bill and Julie Kent, the School of Civic and Economic Thought and Leadership, and the W.P. Carey School of Business for their collective funding support to publish this inaugural, first edition of the Doing Business North America report.

This research work is a product of staff and undergraduate students and is based on publicly-available data sources. The findings and interpretations do not necessarily reflect the views of Arizona State University, the Center for the Study of Economic Liberty or any other ASU affiliates. Because the data was collected from government websites and official documents, the Center for the Study of Economic Liberty does not guarantee the accuracy of the data. The document should also not be viewed as a form of legal or tax preparation advice.

The Center for the Study of Economic Liberty acknowledges the World Bank's Doing Business report as inspiration for this project.

The authors would like to thank the undergraduate data collection team at Arizona State University for their hard work on this project: Anamita Anuva, Felipe Barbosa, Jessica Carter, Tara Dash, Austin Fairbanks, Celeste Karlsrud, Ashley Marrs, Nicholas McCrossan, Steven Moore, Louie Pires, Tamille Suhir, and Kunal Vohra.

We would like to thank the team that helped us with the effort of collecting the data for the Mexican cities: Alan Antoine Castillo Huerta, Alberto Rada Molinares, Alexis E. Salgado Mejía, Carlos Loyola Martínez, Daan Morales Ayala, Daniel Buenrostro Zavala, Edgar Herrejon Rivera, Edwin Arturo Portillo López, Erendira V. Romero Valdez, Jaime Eduardo Almazan Flores, Jorge Ruiz Meza, Mirna Patricia Ponce Figueroa, Omar Raya León, and Regino Vázquez Rodríguez.

We would also like to thank the members of the team that not only helped with the collection of data but also aided with the coordination for the different areas of the report: Alejandro Ramírez Chavez, Rebeca Cabrera Valle, Yeffry E. Estrada Calderón, and Zabdi Dalila Chávez Gárate.

We also thank Isaac Gael Soria Cervantes for his overall assistance with the report. And finally we extend a very special thank you to Ángel Rodríguez Aquino from Laboratorio de políticas para la Seguridad y el Desarrollo and Eric Araujo Martinez for their help as statistical and legal advisors. Without their contribution and understanding of the Mexican law's whereabouts the work would have taken a lot longer.
